From the Editor-in-Chief

With great pride and honor, I present the Hastings International and Comparative Law (HICLR) Winter 2021 Issue, Volume 44.

The HICLR Editorial Board began working on this volume during a time of unprecedented uncertainty. COVID-19 and shelter-in-place orders forced our team to adapt quickly to working remotely while being physically cut-off from our peers. This issue is dedicated to all students who face a similar predicament. May your resilience and endeavor for academic enrichment be unwavering even in times of national crises.

Our Winter 2021 issue begins with Professor Robin Hui Huan's article, Shareholder Inspection Rights in China: An Empirical Study, which analyzes the Chinese shareholder inspection rights regime and the inspirations it drew from the U.S. corporate structure, and what improvements can be made. In his Comment, Erik Sokol discusses three differing theories of corporate bankruptcy and the recent resurgence towards a modified universalism approach to insolvency.

We are also proud to include two student Notes from two excellent UC Hastings law students. In The Global Shift to 5G, Brittany Wightman assesses the risks of the growing commercial demand for 5G technology amidst threat of Chinese government sponsored cyberattacks, and what may be done to offset the threat. In his Note, Sam A. Bidgoli provides a historical analysis of how the Iranian Jangali Movement in the early 20th century continues to echo and influence modern day Iranian protests and social movements.

Lastly, I am grateful to all the staff editors of HICLR for their incredible work. You are the backbone of HICLR and this issue would not have been possible without your dedication.
